Adam Marshall This one does it for me

Tonco Tijdeman Thuis logo appeal most to me as the font is more playfull, which education mat also bevond in order to be significant. The more lines Hove more a sense of 'enlightment'. This is for me the beter ons, although I somewhat miss the true connection with education, clear in ons gelanceerd...

Josh Wilson My #1. I like the action and the upward trajectory of the lines emanating from the circles.

Dave Eveland Similar to the one with three lines, I think this one is a bit better - perhaps the lines could be shorter. It gives the impression that 'something' is emerging from the rings - perhaps like a drop of water from the water ripples.

The letter a looks abnormal. It does have good contrast on the white background.

Neal Caidin I like this one the best because the lines remind me of a shining star, or it can represent the hub and spoke of NGDLE. I would prefer it was inverted like the option with the small blue circle. A small solid blue circle with white lines for a star sounds like it might be nice.

Dede Hourican This is my favorite. The logo doesn't look like a wireless symbol. The targets brands use whike background/darker lettering. Then swap it for their campaigns. (See nike and apple)

Josh Wilson -1.

Dave Eveland This changes the idea of something in the ripples to something above it, and I think it presents well. Contrast is good, and it gives the impression of something beyond - progressively different from Sakai in the past.

Josh Wilson My #2.

Dave Eveland Like the other one with five lines, the lines in this one are closer together, and I think it helps define the 'invisible dot' at the center of the ripples better.

Josh Wilson Playful. I wanted to like it. I wish that this would have meaning beyond the community.

Dave Eveland While I love the feline allusion, I'm not sure folks will 'get it'. It's great for Sakai users who know about the mascot, but not for others, and the rays (five lines) confuse the 'cat' outline.

Matt J Always going to be my first. None of the others seem very memorable to me.

Diego del Blanco I like it simple

Dave Eveland While these sets of logos were not my favorite, they remind me of Saturn - a white planet with blue rings.

Steve Like the flattened rings more than the deeper ones

Josh Wilson -1 for me.

Dave Eveland A much more simplified version, (3 lines) - too simple. The lack of lines makes it harder to infer why they are there.
